Palliative care is a multi-disciplinary approach to serious illness that prioritizes the values of presence, communication, and clinical excellence. Studies have shown that, where “cure” is no longer an option, best practice palliative care improves physical, social, and spiritual outcomes in measurable domains. Much work is required to research and implement evidence based best practices, train the necessary labor force, and integrate palliative care into the healthcare systems of all countries. UCSD can play a leading role in this incipient movement for global health justice.

Panel Discussion:
William Mitchell, M.D., medical oncology
Mary Deveraux, Ph.D., UCSD Research Ethics Program
Janis Jenkins, Ph.D., psychological/medical anthropologist
